English philosopher, David Hume suggests that the self is just a bundle of perceptions, like links in a chain.

To look for a unifying self (central controller) beyond those perceptions is like looking for a chain apart from the links that constitute it.